The Town-The Play-Mrs. Carlton-The Conclusion. From The New-York Daily Times. "The best American Novel of the season, as far as we have seen. The heroine is a true woman-high in principle, strong in affection, clear in intellect. The other principal characters are her guardian, her lover, a queenly Mrs. Carlton, a domestic Machiavel named Knowlton, and one Capt. Dartan, an old revolutionary soldier, with his heart (and that a large one) in the right place. The story is full of interest and the characters Having completed arrangements with Messra. marked with individuality." From The New-York Express.

Blanche Desrwood is a work of genuine vigor, full of pascion, of life and character, and especially a reflection of these as developed in our midst. It possesses a distinction from our other local novels, that of a sustained and dignified tone, which, if it does not aim at a uniform ideality, reaches an elegance and beauty in its materials and finish quite equal to the best English novels. From the first page to the end the interest is graduated with accelerating intensity, and as a delicious love story or as a well-knit intrigue skillfully managed with a view to intensity of Notwithstanding the vest popularity which Mrs. Southworth has acquired by her previous writings among all classes of people, in the production of the present work she has evidently far excelled any of her former efforts. The story is entirely American and partly historical, and opens in the year 1911 is one of the finest districts in Maryland. The plot is one of exceeding interest, into which are woven many of the stirring closing events and scenes of the last War with Great Britain. Mrs. Southworth has brought to her task a vigorous intellect and a graceful and polished teen and may pride herself as and a graceful and polished pen, and may pride herself as baving attained a position second to no female writer in the country and greatly superior to most of our male authors who seek to live upon a literary reputation."
